

Travelling around Scotland

Scotland is an incredibly beautiful country, which is rich in both history and culture. If you are planning to travel through Scotland in the near future there are plenty of things that you should put on your itinerary. Charming villages, monster myths and world famous castles are just the beginning of what Scotland has to offer. Whether you are traveling solo or with a group, Scotland has something for everyone.

As an added bonus, the train system in Scotland is very convenient and reliable. Take advantage of the mass transit, it may take a little more time, but you will save tons of money and meet really interesting people.

For either the history buff or wannabe princess in your group, check out some of Scotland's many famous castles. Palace of Holyroodhouse which has a rich history and a humble beginning, founded as a monastery in 1128. This was also the home of Mary Queen of Scots for a short period in the mid sixteenth century. If you are looking for a fairy-tale take in Crathes Castle which has everything that is expected of a castle including a turrets and walled garden. And of course Edinburgh Castle which has been home to numerous Scottish Kings and Queens. This is where the Scottish crown jewels are housed. Be sure to take in some of the most breathtaking view of the city from the Castle. If your travel plans only allow you to visit one castle, make it this one.

If you are more interested in Cathedrals and Abby's than Scotland is sure to please. Include Glasgow Cathedral in your travel plans though Glasgow. There is little doubt that this medieval cathedral will not only please the history buffs in your family, but everyone.

For the freemason in your group or for anyone who has read The Da Vinci Code, The Rosslyn Chapel is a must see. If the sorted history and myths that surrounds the chapel are not enough to excite you, the architecture should be more than enough to lure you.

Don't pass up the opportunity to visit Loch Ness. Not only will you be able to visit a charming town, but you may even catch a glimpse of Nessie.

If you have a couple of shoppers in travel your travel group, plan a couple of days in the capital city of Edinburgh. With world class shopping and eatery's it is a great place to wrap up your perfect Scotland vacation. With a little planning you will be able to make your trip to Scotland, the vacation of a lifetime.
